Empty Field II

Picture Description¹⁾

A high-angle, black and white photograph shows a field of harvested crop stubble arranged in rows.

Analysis¹⁾

This stark, monochromatic photograph captures the aftermath of a harvest in a field, revealing a landscape of cut stalks and scattered straw. The composition is dominated by the rhythmic repetition of stubble rows, creating a sense of order amidst the chaotic texture of the field debris. The high-contrast lighting accentuates the rough surface of the soil and the sharp edges of the cut stalks, lending a tactile quality to the scene. The photograph evokes a sense of quietude and desolation, reflecting the cyclical nature of agriculture and the passage of time.
