COME TOGETHER

Picture Description¹⁾

A black and white photograph of a poster with the words "Come Together"; a photograph of two people with drawings on their faces, and a pack of cigarettes.

Analysis¹⁾

This black and white photograph presents a striking visual statement on the themes of mortality, disease, and societal influence. Two individuals, rendered in stark monochrome, are depicted with unsettling facial markings resembling sutures, tear-like streaks, and in the case of the male figure, the word 'Krebs' (German for cancer) superimposed over his mouth. The female figure wears a bandana and sports fang-like teeth, adding to the disquieting aesthetic. Above them, the phrase 'Come Together' is emblazoned, starkly contrasting with the imagery below. Further text below reads 'and learn to live as freaks'. The composition is completed by a pack of Stuyvesant cigarettes with a skull drawn on the package, symbolizing the harmful effects of tobacco. The piece evokes a sense of unease and prompts reflection on the destructive forces that shape individual and collective experiences.
